Long Form Response

11. Answer: Utilitarianism in business decision-making revolves around the principle of "the greatest good for the greatest number," which suggests that ethical choices should aim to maximize overall happiness and minimize suffering. This approach influences businesses to evaluate the potential outcomes of their decisions not just for their stakeholders, but for the broader community as well. By prioritizing actions that benefit the majority, companies can foster trust and enhance their reputation, thus contributing to long-term success. However, this principle also raises ethical dilemmas, as decisions that favor the majority may inadvertently harm minority groups. Therefore, while utilitarianism provides a framework for making ethical choices, it requires careful consideration of all stakeholders involved.

Note: correct because it accurately describes how utilitarianism guides business decision-making by emphasizing the importance of maximizing overall happiness and minimizing suffering for the greatest number of people, which in turn builds trust and enhances a company's reputation.
