

Multiple Choice

1. Answer: A

Options: A) Social policies, Social programmes and Social impacts; B) Social evaluations, Social programmes and Social impacts; C) Social policies, Social evidencing and Social impacts; D) Social policies, Social programmes and Social analysis

Note: According to Wood (1991), the three outcomes of Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) encompass social policies that guide corporate behavior, social programmes that implement these policies, and social impacts that reflect the effectiveness of such initiatives in benefiting society.

2. Answer: B

Options: A) Job design; B) Job enrichment; C) Job rate; D) Job planning

Note: Individual freedom to schedule work is an example of job enrichment because it enhances employees' autonomy and control over their tasks, leading to increased job satisfaction and motivation.

3. Answer: D

Options: A) Threat of substitutes.; B) Threat of suppliers.; C) Power of buyers.; D) Threat from government.

Note: The correct answer is "Threat from government" because Porter's Five Forces model includes competitive rivalry, threat of new entrants, bargaining power of suppliers, bargaining power of buyers, and the threat of substitute products, but does not explicitly consider government influence as one of the core forces affecting industry competitiveness.

4. Answer: A

Options: A) Inputs; B) Outputs; C) Outtakes; D) Outcomes

Note: The correct answer is "Inputs" because Macnamara's pyramid of evaluation identifies this stage as the phase where the situation analysis is conducted to inform the development of objectives and implementation plans.

5. Answer: C

Options: A) Business; B) Succession; C) Ad hoc; D) Financial

Note: Ad hoc plans are not recognized as a formal type of plan in business administration because they are typically temporary and created for specific situations rather than being part of a structured planning process.

True / False

6. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The development of Toyota's Prius and Honda's hybrid Civic was driven by increasing consumer demand and regulatory pressures for environmentally friendly vehicles that reduce fuel consumption and greenhouse gas emissions.

7. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Post-purchase re-evaluation primarily focuses on the buyer's assessment of their satisfaction and the value derived from the product or service, rather than the vendor's selling success.

8. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Personal values serve as foundational principles that guide individuals' choices and actions, thereby shaping their decision-making processes in both personal and professional contexts.

9. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The statement is false because while processes are important, the operational status of an organization is primarily indicated by a combination of various elements including performance metrics, financial health, and employee engagement, rather than processes alone.

10. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Inelastic demand is characterized by a situation where the percentage change in quantity demanded is less than the percentage change in price, indicating that consumers continue to purchase relatively the same amount despite price fluctuations.

Long Form Response

11. Answer: Corporate transparency refers to the openness and clarity with which a company communicates its operations, decisions, and financial performance to its stakeholders, including employees, customers, investors, and the community. This concept is significant in modern business practices as it fosters trust among stakeholders, which is crucial for long-term success. When organizations are transparent, they provide stakeholders with the information needed to make informed decisions, thereby enhancing accountability and reducing the potential for misunderstandings or mistrust. Furthermore, transparency can lead to stronger relationships, improved reputation, and ultimately, increased loyalty and support from stakeholders, contributing to sustainable business growth. In an era where consumers and investors demand ethical practices, corporate transparency has become a foundational element of effective business strategy.

Note: correct because it clearly defines corporate transparency and articulates its importance in building trust among stakeholders, which is essential for a company's long-term success.

12. Answer: Work specialization, also known as division of labor, refers to the practice of breaking down tasks into smaller, specialized segments assigned to different employees within an organization. This concept enhances productivity as it allows workers to focus on specific tasks where they can develop expertise, leading to increased efficiency and faster output. However, while work specialization can boost productivity, it can also lead to employee workload challenges, such as monotony and reduced job satisfaction, as individuals may perform repetitive tasks without variety. Balancing specialization with job enrichment strategies is crucial for maintaining employee motivation and optimizing overall organizational performance.

Note: The answer correctly identifies work specialization as a method of dividing tasks to improve efficiency and productivity, while also acknowledging the potential negative impacts on employee workload, such as monotony and reduced job satisfaction.