

Multiple Choice

1. Answer: D

Options: A) city firefighter.; B) social worker.; C) dry cleaner.; D) garment factory worker.

Note: A garment factory worker is considered a basic job because it produces goods for export, thereby contributing to the local economy, while non-basic jobs typically provide services to the local population without generating outside income.

2. Answer: C

Options: A) A central market; B) High-density housing; C) A religious building; D) Government office buildings

Note: A religious building traditionally occupies the center of a historic Asian city because it serves as a focal point for community gatherings, cultural practices, and spiritual life, reflecting the importance of religion in shaping the social and geographical landscape of these cities.

3. Answer: A

Options: A) crude death rate from the crude birth rate.; B) crude birth rate from the crude death rate.; C) doubling time from the crude birth rate.; D) fertility rate from the crude death rate.

Note: The rate of natural increase is calculated by subtracting the crude death rate from the crude birth rate because this formula reveals the net change in population size due to births and deaths over a specific period.

4. Answer: D

Options: A) contagious diffusion; B) relocation diffusion; C) innovative diffusion; D) hierarchical diffusion

Note: Hierarchical diffusion is the correct answer because it describes the process by which new ideas or trends, such as fashion designs, spread from influential individuals or nodes in society to broader populations, often through established social networks.

5. Answer: D

Options: A) UN; B) NATO; C) ASEAN; D) PLO

Note: The PLO (Palestine Liberation Organization) is primarily a nationalist group focused on representing Palestinian interests rather than functioning as a supranational organization that transcends national boundaries and governance.

True / False

6. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Canada's third major migration stream primarily consists of immigrants from Asia and Europe, rather than Latin America, making the statement true.

7. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The statement is true because the third zone of Burgess's concentric zone model, known as the zone of working-class homes, is characterized by better housing conditions, including single-family homes and higher-rent apartments, compared to the inner zones, reflecting the transition towards more affluent residential areas.

8. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Christianity is not experiencing the fastest growth rate among religions in the United States; instead, other religious groups such as non-religious individuals and certain minority faiths are growing more rapidly.

9. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Distance decay is a principle in geography that suggests the likelihood of interaction between two places decreases as the distance between them increases, reflecting the diminishing importance of distant locations compared to nearby ones.

10. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Siberia's vast landmass is situated far from oceanic bodies, which prevents the moderating effects of water that usually stabilize temperatures, leading to significant temperature fluctuations between summer and winter.

Long Form Response

11. Answer: The transition from the European Economic Community (EEC) to the European Union (EU) marked a significant evolution in European geography and politics. Established in 1957, the EEC focused primarily on economic cooperation among six founding countries, aiming to create a common market. However, the formation of the EU in 1993 expanded this cooperation beyond economics to include political integration, social policies, and a shared currency, the euro. This change reflected a growing desire among European nations to work together not only for economic stability but also for political unity and peace, especially after the challenges of World War II. The EU now encompasses a broader geographic area, including 27 member states, promoting collaboration on issues like immigration, security, and environmental policies, thus reshaping the political landscape of Europe.

Note: correct because it accurately outlines the shift from the EEC's focus on economic cooperation to the EU's broader integration of political, social, and monetary policies, illustrating the evolving complexity of European geography and politics.

12. Answer: Countries with large and rapidly aging populations face significant challenges, particularly concerning their health care systems and services. As the number of elderly individuals increases, there is a greater demand for medical care, including long-term treatments and specialized services for age-related conditions. This shift places immense pressure on health care resources, leading to potential shortages of medical professionals and facilities. Additionally, the rising costs of health care can strain government budgets and lead to higher taxes or reduced services for younger populations. To address these challenges, countries must adapt their health care policies, invest in age-appropriate services, and promote preventive care to maintain the well-being of both elderly and younger citizens.

Note: The answer correctly identifies the increased demand for medical care due to a growing elderly population, highlighting the resulting pressure on health care systems, resource shortages, and rising costs associated with age-related health needs.
