Long Form Response

11. Answer: To construct the truth table for the argument $\sim C \supset D$, $D \supset C$, and C , we evaluate all possible truth values for the propositions C and D . The truth table reveals that the premises lead to a contradiction when C is true and D is false. Specifically, if C is true (T) and D is false (F), $\sim C$ is false, making the first premise ($\sim C \supset D$) true, while the second premise ($D \supset C$) becomes false since a false antecedent cannot imply a true consequent. Thus, the argument is invalid. A counterexample is when C is true and D is false, demonstrating that the premises do not guarantee the conclusion.
Note: correct because it demonstrates that the premises lead to a contradiction when C is true and D is false, thus showing the argument is invalid and providing a specific scenario as a counterexample.
12. Answer: The theme of self-sacrifice in the philosophy of Mahasi Sayadaw is intricately linked to the Buddhist ideals of compassion and the relinquishment of ego for the liberation of all sentient beings. Mahasi Sayadaw emphasizes the importance of mindfulness and insight meditation, through which practitioners cultivate a deep understanding of impermanence and the interconnectedness of all life. This understanding fosters a willingness to engage in self-sacrifice, as individuals recognize that personal suffering is often intertwined with the suffering of others. The implications of this theme within Buddhist thought highlight the transformative power of altruism and the pursuit of enlightenment not solely for oneself, but as a means to alleviate the collective suffering of humanity. Such self-sacrifice is not an end in itself, but rather a path leading towards the ultimate realization of non-self and liberation from the cycle of samsara, thereby reinforcing the ethical dimensions of Buddhist practice.

Note: correct because it connects Mahasi Sayadaw's emphasis on mindfulness and insight meditation to the broader Buddhist ideals of compassion and ego relinquishment, illustrating how these concepts foster a willingness to engage in self-sacrifice for the benefit of all sentient beings.
