

Multiple Choice

1. Answer: A

Options: A) Hypostatization; B) Appeal to authority; C) Red herring fallacy; D) False cause fallacy; E) Straw man fallacy

Note: Hypostatization is the fallacy that occurs when an abstract concept is treated as if it were a concrete, real entity, leading to a shift in meaning that undermines the consistency of the argument.

2. Answer: C

Options: A) fairness and bias.; B) ethical and unethical.; C) duty and charity.; D) positive and negative rights.; E) freedom and restriction.

Note: Singer's argument challenges the conventional view that duties are distinct from charitable actions by asserting that our moral obligations to help those in need extend beyond mere charitable giving to encompass a duty to prevent suffering and promote well-being.

3. Answer: B

Options: A) Fallacy of Accident; B) Questionable Analogy; C) Questionable Cause; D) Fallacy of Composition

Note: The analogy between the universe and a watch is questionable because it oversimplifies complex cosmological processes and assumes that complexity necessitates a designer, which does not account for alternative explanations such as natural processes and scientific theories.

4. Answer: B

Options: A) all of our inward principles.; B) our highest inward principle.; C) the principles dictated by law.; D) the commands of God.; E) the principles of our elders.

Note: Butler asserts that true virtue arises from aligning our actions with our innate moral principles, which he views as the highest standard for ethical behavior.

5. Answer: A

Options: A) that is irrelevant as it is never wrong to painlessly kill an animal.; B) that is only wrong if the animal is a pet.; C) that is entirely dependent on the species of the animal.; D) that is dependent on the cultural norms of a society.; E) that is ethically unimportant.

Note: In Singer's utilitarian framework, the moral consideration of animals is based on their capacity to suffer, leading him to argue that painlessly killing an animal is not inherently wrong if it does not cause unnecessary suffering or harm.

True / False

6. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Mill's philosophy of utilitarianism posits that the moral worth of actions is determined by their utility, which he defines as the pleasure or benefit derived from those actions, thus affirming that utility encompasses the advantages gained by the user.

7. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Thomas Nagel does not categorize moral considerations in 'War and Massacre' as rights-based and duty-based; instead, he primarily discusses the moral implications of war through the lens of impartiality and the consequences of actions, rather than through a strict rights or duties framework.

8. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The statement is false because successful interrogations can be achieved through ethical techniques such as rapport-building and psychological strategies, which are more effective and humane than the use of torture.

9. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: In Aristotle's philosophy, incontinence, or lack of self-control, occurs when a person knows the right action but is overcome by contrary desires, suggesting that the failure to act on knowledge is not solely a matter of knowing what is right but also involves an internal struggle between reason and desire.

10. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Aquinas argues that 'Man is a rational being' is not self-evident because, while it may be true, it requires demonstration and is not universally recognized or understood by all individuals, thus lacking the clarity and immediacy characteristic of self-evident truths.

Long Form Response

11. Answer: In response to the criticism that utilitarianism is a doctrine worthy of swine, John Stuart Mill counters by distinguishing between higher and lower pleasures, asserting that not all pleasures are equal in quality. He argues that intellectual and moral pleasures, which he considers superior, provide a greater satisfaction than mere physical pleasures. Mill emphasizes that the cost of pursuing these higher pleasures often involves a greater degree of effort, education, and personal development, which ultimately enriches human experience. This differentiation between the qualities of pleasure demonstrates that utilitarianism, rather than promoting a hedonistic lifestyle, advocates for a nuanced understanding of well-being that values the depth and richness of human fulfillment over mere sensory gratification. Hence, Mill asserts that a life dedicated solely to lower pleasures is less desirable and less human than one that seeks higher, more meaningful experiences.

Note: This answer is correct because it accurately reflects Mill's argument that utilitarianism values qualitative differences in pleasures, asserting that higher intellectual and moral pleasures, despite their greater effort and cost, offer a more profound satisfaction than mere physical pleasures, thereby addressing the critique that utilitarianism reduces human experience to mere animalistic indulgence.

12. Answer: The Egyptian composition Ludul Bel Nemequi illustrates Marduk's character as indifferent and detached through its depiction of the deity's aloofness in the face of human suffering and moral dilemmas. Marduk's apparent disinterest in the pleas of the protagonist, who struggles with injustice and existential despair, highlights a divine figure that operates on a plane separate from human concerns, reinforcing a perception of the gods as removed from the moral fabric of human life. This portrayal prompts a deeper philosophical inquiry into the nature of divine representation in ancient thought, suggesting that such indifference reflects a broader existential theme where the divine does not engage with human ethics or emotions. Consequently, this characterization invites contemplation on the implications of divine detachment for human agency and the moral responsibilities attributed to both gods and humans in the philosophical discourse of ancient cultures.

Note: The answer correctly identifies Marduk's indifference and detachment by emphasizing his aloofness towards human suffering, which serves to illustrate the broader philosophical implications of divine representation as disconnected from human moral experiences.
