

Multiple Choice

1. Answer: E

Options: A) an object of moral sympathy.; B) a morally autonomous being.; C) a moral patient.; D) a being of moral integrity.; E) a moral agent.

Note: Norcross argues that moral agency requires the capacity for moral reasoning, and without this capacity, a being cannot be held responsible for its actions or considered a moral agent.

2. Answer: C

Options: A) the moral character of the agent who performs it.; B) the consequences of the action.; C) the maxim that is acted on.; D) all of the above.

Note: According to Kant, the moral worth of an action is determined by the maxim- or underlying principle- that motivates the action, as it reflects the agent's intention and adherence to duty rather than the consequences of the action itself.

3. Answer: A

Options: A) 36,000; B) 7,000; C) 24,000; D) 50,000; E) 28,000

Note: The correct answer is 36,000 because it reflects the significant number of female renunciators who were inspired by Chandanbala's teachings and embody the philosophical principle of renunciation in her tradition.

4. Answer: A

Options: A) Sri Lakshmi; B) Brahma; C) Nanak; D) Vishnu; E) Shiva

Note: The correct answer is Sri Lakshmi because she is recognized in certain philosophical traditions as a pivotal figure in the origin of sacred texts, symbolizing abundance and spiritual insight that laid the foundation for subsequent religious literature.

5. Answer: A

Options: A) enhance physical strength.; B) reward good behavior.; C) develop artistic skills.; D) increase emotional intelligence.; E) maximize athletic performance.

Note: The correct answer is based on the understanding that cognitive-behavioral therapy (CBT) aims to improve mental well-being, which can indirectly lead to enhanced physical strength by promoting healthier thought patterns and behaviors that contribute to overall physical health.

True / False

6. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The statement is false because a moral saint can appreciate fine art not just for its moral lessons, but also for its aesthetic qualities and the emotional experiences it evokes, demonstrating that moral appreciation and aesthetic enjoyment are not mutually exclusive.

7. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The moral argument against imprisoning debtors primarily centers on the ethical implications of punishing individuals for their inability to pay debts, rather than solely on considerations of their mental health.

8. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Anscombe argues that moral obligations are not solely defined by divine commands, but rather involve a complex interplay of reason, human flourishing, and the nature of moral actions themselves.

9. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The fallacy of appeal to popularity is true because it asserts that a belief or behavior is justified solely based on its acceptance or popularity among others, rather than on its intrinsic merits or truth.

10. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The statement 'Be~j' is not a valid translation into predicate logic because it misrepresents the relationship between Earth and Jupiter, as Earth is actually smaller than Jupiter.

Long Form Response

11. Answer: Tan ah Tiat's argument for acquittal based on his opium habit and dependence on his grandmother's earnings raises significant ethical implications, particularly concerning the notion of personal responsibility. While he may seek to absolve himself of accountability by attributing his actions to addiction and reliance on familial support, this reasoning is inconsistent. It fails to acknowledge that individuals have a moral obligation to manage their dependencies and the consequences of their choices. Moreover, by relying on his grandmother's earnings, he undermines the very autonomy he claims to lack due to his addiction. This inconsistency highlights a deeper philosophical tension between victimhood and moral agency, challenging the notion that addiction entirely diminishes personal responsibility.

Note: correct because it critically examines the ethical implications of personal responsibility in the context of addiction and familial reliance, highlighting the inconsistency in Tan ah Tiat's argument that seeks to deflect accountability for his actions.

12. Answer: The concept of "mutual coercion, mutually agreed upon" refers to the idea that countries can collectively agree to impose sanctions on one another to address global climate change effectively. By establishing a framework where all countries participate in creating enforceable sanctions, the incentive structure surrounding carbon emissions and environmental responsibility can be transformed. For example, nations might agree to impose tariffs on goods from countries that do not meet specified emissions targets, thereby encouraging compliance through economic consequences. This collaborative approach ensures that all parties are held accountable, fostering a shared commitment to reducing greenhouse gas emissions and promoting sustainable practices. Ultimately, such mutual coercion can lead to more significant progress in combating climate change by aligning national interests with global environmental goals.

Note: The answer correctly identifies that "mutual coercion, mutually agreed upon" allows countries to collaboratively establish and enforce sanctions as a means to incentivize compliance with climate change agreements, thereby reshaping the economic and environmental responsibilities among nations.
