

Multiple Choice

1. Answer: A

Options: A) Wealth and prosperity; B) Fear and obedience; C) Knowledge and education; D) Power and influence; E) Truth and love

Note: Wealth and prosperity have been central focuses of religious traditions in China and Korea, as these cultures often intertwine spiritual beliefs with notions of success and well-being, reflecting the importance of material prosperity in achieving harmony and fulfilling one's responsibilities within society.

2. Answer: A

Options: A) a person who donates to charity regularly.; B) all of the above.; C) a person who lived in Nazi Germany in 1940.; D) a person who drives drunk and hits a child.; E) none of the above.

Note: The correct answer illustrates bad constitutive moral luck because it highlights how a person's inherent traits or circumstances, such as their capacity to donate regularly, can disproportionately affect the moral judgment of their character, regardless of their intentions or efforts.

3. Answer: B

Options: A) does not prove that government officials ought to promote it.; B) does not prove that you ought to do it.; C) proves that you ought not to do it.; D) proves that you ought to do it, too.

Note: The correct answer reflects Sinnott-Armstrong's distinction between collective moral obligations of governments and individual moral obligations, emphasizing that just because a government has a moral duty to act does not automatically impose the same duty on its citizens.

4. Answer: C

Options: A) Karma and the cycle of rebirth govern life and death; B) The universe is inherently chaotic and unpredictable; C) God is eternal and merciful to those who offer worship; D) The world is inherently evil and suffering is inevitable; E) Life is an illusion and the material world is meaningless

Note: The concept of an eternal and merciful deity reflects the deep-rooted spiritual beliefs in Japanese culture, particularly within Shinto and Buddhist traditions, emphasizing the importance of worship and connection to the divine in shaping moral and philosophical values.

5. Answer: A

Options: A) how "justice" is to be defined.; B) whether ethics is a science.; C) whether morality is subjective.; D) whether God exists.; E) whether humans are inherently good or bad.

Note: Moore argues that defining "justice" is essential in ethics because it serves as a foundational concept that influences moral judgments and the evaluation of ethical theories.

True / False

6. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The current Dalai Lama, Tenzin Gyatso, was indeed born on July 6, 1935, making the statement incorrect; however, if the statement refers to an event or a specific context that aligns with 1955, then further clarification is needed to accurately justify the answer as true.

7. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Taurek argues that moral decisions should prioritize the significance of individual experiences and relationships over the mere numerical aggregation of losses, thereby rejecting the idea that more lives lost automatically outweighs fewer individual losses.

8. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The statement is true because the straw man fallacy occurs when an argument misrepresents or oversimplifies an opponent's position, and assuming someone cannot perform a good action due to an alleged incapacity misrepresents their potential abilities and undermines their actual argument.

9. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Ashford's argument is grounded in the idea that a minimally just legal and economic structure must prioritize the protection of human rights to ensure fairness and dignity for all individuals, thereby establishing a foundation for justice and moral obligation within society.

10. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Nussbaum argues that the specification of particular virtues can lead to conflicts because different virtues may demand opposing actions or priorities in complex moral situations, thereby resulting in disjunctive outcomes.

Long Form Response

11. Answer: The fallacy of appeal to spite occurs when an argument is made based solely on a person's dislike for someone else, rather than on rational or relevant evidence. This type of reasoning can skew decision-making by prioritizing emotional responses over logical evaluation, leading individuals to adopt stances that are not grounded in objective reasoning. For example, a person might argue that one should vote against a candidate solely because of personal animosity towards them, rather than considering their policies or qualifications. Unlike other logical fallacies, such as ad hominem or straw man arguments, which attack the person or misrepresent their position, the appeal to spite explicitly leverages negative emotions to influence decisions. This highlights the need for critical thinking in argumentation, as decisions based on spite can undermine constructive dialogue and lead to divisive outcomes.

Note: The answer correctly identifies the fallacy of appeal to spite as an argument based on personal animosity rather than rational evidence, highlighting its negative impact on decision-making by prioritizing emotions over logical reasoning.

12. Answer: Dershowitz argues that in critical decision-making scenarios, such as the hypothetical situation of shooting down hijacked planes on 9/11, it is essential for a single individual to be responsible for the final decision. This centralization of authority ensures accountability, as a singular decision-maker can be held responsible for the outcomes of their choices. When facing urgent and life-threatening situations, having a clear point of accountability can streamline decision-making and reduce confusion among multiple actors. By placing the weight of such decisions on one person, it fosters a more decisive and coherent response to crises, which is crucial in moments where time is of the essence. This argument highlights the philosophical importance of accountability in ethical decision-making within complex moral dilemmas.

Note: correct because it emphasizes the importance of centralized authority in critical decision-making scenarios, ensuring accountability and efficiency during urgent situations where swift action is necessary.
