

Multiple Choice

1. Answer: A

Options: A) Life was meaningful for most people.; B) Life was a gift to be cherished and enjoyed.; C) Life was hard but worthwhile.; D) Life was an unpredictable journey with moments of meaning.; E) Life was a series of random events with no ultimate purpose.

Note: Clarence Darrow believed that life's meaning was derived from the experiences and struggles of individuals, asserting that for most people, their lives held significance through their pursuit of happiness and the quest for understanding in a complex world.

2. Answer: A

Options: A) the concept of combatants and noncombatants is outdated and irrelevant.; B) "terrorism" should be defined as violence against noncombatants.; C) there is no difference between combatants and noncombatants.; D) the difference between combatants and noncombatants is largely ambiguous.; E) the difference between combatants and noncombatants is categorical and clear.

Note: Valls argues that the traditional distinction between combatants and noncombatants fails to account for the complexities of modern warfare, where civilians are often inadvertently involved and targeted, rendering the concept outdated and irrelevant.

3. Answer: D

Options: A) the fundamental laws of physics.; B) the purpose of life.; C) the existence of the divine.; D) the causes of good and evil.; E) both a and b.

Note: Augustine argues that understanding the causes of good and evil is essential for true happiness, as this knowledge enables individuals to align their desires with the ultimate good and avoid the pitfalls of evil.

4. Answer: D

Options: A) the postulate of immortality.; B) the autonomous will.; C) the categorical imperative.; D) legislating for oneself.; E) the unity of consciousness.

Note: Anscombe criticizes Kant's idea of legislating for oneself because she argues that moral laws should not be viewed as self-imposed commands but rather as objective standards that exist independently of individual will.

5. Answer: A

Options: A) the animal's lifespan.; B) the animal's direct moral standing.; C) societal norms and expectations.; D) the animal's role in the ecosystem.; E) the animal's inability to defend itself.

Note: Carruther's view posits that the justification for moral criticism stems from the recognition that animals have finite lifespans, which emphasizes their vulnerability and the moral responsibility humans hold in ensuring their well-being during that limited time.

True / False

6. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: A valid disjunctive syllogism allows for the repetition of terms, as it relies on the structure of the argument rather than the number of times a term is mentioned, enabling the conclusion to follow from the premises regardless of term repetition.

7. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: According to Sartre's existentialism, the absence of a predetermined moral order established by God means that individuals are free to create their own values and make choices without divine constraints, leading to the conclusion that, in a godless universe, anything can be deemed permissible.

8. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Cicero emphasizes that the expediency of an action does not necessarily align with moral righteousness, as ethical principles often require a consideration of justice and virtue beyond mere practical outcomes.

9. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The statement is false because, in Sikhism, while the Five Ks are important symbols of faith, they are not considered the sole means to attain liberation; rather, liberation is achieved through devotion to God, selfless service, and living a truthful life.

10. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Dershowitz argues that while he may support limited use of torture in extreme cases to protect national security, he does not advocate for all forms of torture to be justified, particularly emphasizing the moral and ethical implications of psychological manipulation.

Long Form Response

11. Answer: To construct the truth table for the argument $M \supset N, \sim M \cdot O \supset N$, we analyze the components: M , N , O , and their negations and conjunctions. The truth table includes eight rows, representing all possible truth value combinations of M , N , and O . After evaluating the premises $M \supset N$ and $\sim M \cdot O \supset N$, we find that when both premises are true, N must also be true, confirming that the conclusion follows logically from the premises. Therefore, the argument is valid, as there are no counterexamples where the premises are true and the conclusion is false. This demonstrates that the truth of the premises guarantees the truth of the conclusion, solidifying the argument's validity.

Note: correct because the truth table demonstrates that whenever both premises $M \supset N$ and $\sim M \cdot O$ are true, N is also true, thereby validating the argument by confirming that the conclusion logically follows from the premises without any counterexamples.

12. Answer: Critics of speech codes in the 1980 s and early 1990 s argued that these regulations infringed upon freedom of the press by imposing restrictions on what journalists could report and how they could express their views. They contended that such codes stifle open discourse and limit the robust exchange of ideas essential to a democratic society. By prioritizing certain speech over others, critics claimed that speech codes create a chilling effect on free expression, where individuals may self-censor due to fear of repercussions. This debate highlights the delicate balance between protecting individuals from hate speech and preserving the fundamental rights associated with free speech, emphasizing that any limitations on press freedom must be scrutinized to prevent the erosion of democratic values. Ultimately, the implications for free speech are profound, as the enforcement of speech codes risks undermining the very principles that allow for a free and open society.

Note: The answer correctly identifies that critics of speech codes contended these regulations undermine freedom of the press by restricting journalistic expression and fostering self-censorship, which impedes democratic discourse and the free exchange of ideas.
