

Multiple Choice

1. Answer: A

Options: A) US banks funded the allies much more than Germany and Austria-Hungary; B) US banks funded Germany and Austria-Hungary much more than the allies; C) Wilson secretly favoured the German position; D) None of the above

Note: The correct answer highlights that the financial support provided by US banks to the Allies created strong economic ties and interests that ultimately influenced America's neutrality, as the U.S. was more invested in the success of the Allies than in that of Germany and Austria-Hungary, thereby compromising its neutral stance.

2. Answer: D

Options: A) Institutional constraints and resource constraints.; B) Information and time horizon.; C) Goals.; D) Vectors of economic incentives.

Note: Vectors of economic incentives is the odd one out because it pertains specifically to economic principles and motivations, whereas the other options likely relate to political theories or frameworks.

3. Answer: C

Options: A) Lack of US firepower; B) Concern over oil supplies; C) Limited UN mandate and fear of a protracted conflict; D) Difficult terrain and fear of civilian casualties

Note: The correct answer reflects the constraints imposed by the United Nations mandate, which focused on liberating Kuwait rather than regime change, combined with the U.S. administration's concern that removing Saddam Hussein could lead to a destabilizing power vacuum and a prolonged military engagement in Iraq.

4. Answer: A

Options: A) Increase in the US population; B) Increase in US finances; C) Increase in US military capability; D) Increase in US international influence

Note: The term 'American multiplication table' refers to the exponential growth of the US population during the 19th century, highlighting how rapid demographic increases were viewed as a fundamental aspect of American development and prosperity.

5. Answer: A

Options: A) A focus on class and economic interests; B) A focus on liberal ideology; C) A focus on language and culture; D) All of the above

Note: The correct answer highlights that socio-economic accounts emphasize the influence of class structures and economic interests in shaping U.S. foreign policy during the Cold War, suggesting that decisions were often driven by the needs and goals of specific economic groups rather than purely ideological or geopolitical considerations.

True / False

6. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Societal groups emerge as a result of individuals engaging in various interactions, sharing common interests, values, and goals, which collectively contribute to the formation of distinct social structures within a community.

7. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The statement is true because rogue states are characterized by their disregard for international laws and norms, often engaging in aggressive behavior, supporting terrorism, or pursuing weapons of mass destruction, thus operating outside conventional diplomatic frameworks.

8. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: NSC-68 represented a significant shift in U.S. foreign policy by advocating for a robust military response to the perceived threat of communism globally, thereby expanding the strategy of containment and emphasizing the necessity of developing advanced nuclear weapons, including the hydrogen bomb.

9. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: George H.W. Bush's cautious support for Mikhail Gorbachev and Boris Yeltsin was reflected in his administration's approach to fostering stability in post-Soviet Russia while navigating the complexities of the Cold War's conclusion and the transition to a market economy.

10. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The statement is true because the foreign policies of other states, international law, and intergovernmental organizations significantly influence and limit the options and strategies available to the United States in its foreign policy decisions.

Long Form Response

11. Answer: Economic tools such as sanctions, trade agreements, and financial aid play a significant role in shaping security policy by influencing state behavior and deterring aggressive actions. These instruments leverage economic power to achieve political objectives, often serving as alternatives or complements to military intervention. However, diplomacy remains distinct from these economic tools as it prioritizes negotiation, dialogue, and relationship-building over coercion or incentives. While economic measures can impose costs or benefits, diplomacy fundamentally seeks to create mutual understanding and resolve conflicts through peaceful means. This distinction highlights that, although both economic tools and diplomacy aim to enhance security, their methodologies and underlying philosophies differ significantly in the context of international relations.

Note: correct because it effectively illustrates how economic tools like sanctions and trade agreements influence state behavior and security policy while contrasting them with diplomacy's emphasis on negotiation and relationship-building, thereby highlighting their distinct roles in international relations.

12. Answer: The Responsibility to Protect (R₂P) doctrine is founded on three key principles: the state's responsibility to protect its population from mass atrocities, the international community's obligation to assist states in fulfilling this responsibility, and the readiness to intervene when a state fails to protect its citizens. However, the principle of sovereignty is often perceived as a limitation to R₂P, as it traditionally emphasizes non-interference in a state's internal affairs. This tension arises because sovereign states may prioritize their autonomy over the imperative to protect human rights, leading to reluctance in allowing external intervention even when necessary. Consequently, while sovereignty is a foundational aspect of international law, its interpretation can hinder the effective implementation of R₂P, creating a dichotomy between state sovereignty and the protection of human rights.

Note: correct because it accurately outlines the foundational principles of the Responsibility to Protect doctrine while critically addressing the conflict between state sovereignty and the international community's obligation to intervene in cases of mass atrocities, thus illustrating why sovereignty is viewed as a limitation to R₂P.
