

Multiple Choice

1. Answer: A

Options: A) A strand of neo-isolationist sentiment; B) A strand of internationalist sentiment; C) An expression of American cultural superiority; D) Increased incorporation of public opinion in foreign policy making

Note: The 'New Populism' is characterized by a resurgence of nationalist and protectionist attitudes that emphasize prioritizing domestic interests over international engagement, aligning it with neo-isolationist sentiment.

2. Answer: D

Options: A) A growing effort by governments to prevent the spread of weapons, especially of WMDs.; B) A growth in volume of the arms trade.; C) A change in the nature of the defence trade, linked to the changing nature of conflict.; D) All of these options.

Note: The correct answer "All of these options" is appropriate because various trends, such as increased privatization, the rise of emerging markets in defense manufacturing, and enhanced international collaboration, have collectively characterized the global defense trade landscape since the end of the Cold War.

3. Answer: C

Options: A) Barry Buzan and Ole Waever; B) Kenneth Waltz and Hans Morgenthau; C) Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels; D) Adam Smith and Karl Marx

Note: The correct answer is Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels because they developed the theory of historical materialism, which posits that material conditions and economic factors drive historical development and societal change, fundamentally shaping human history and social structures.

4. Answer: C

Options: A) the United Nations.; B) the National Security Council.; C) the State Department.; D) the National Security Agency.

Note: The State Department is the primary federal agency responsible for overseeing and implementing U.S. foreign policy, making it the correct answer for this question.

5. Answer: D

Options: A) Leaders have incentives to lie; B) If leaders revealed their programs, they would be more likely to be attacked; C) Leaders will not always grant foreign monitors access to their nuclear programs; D) ALL of the above

Note: The uncertainty over which states possess nuclear weapons arises from factors such as the lack of transparency in national arsenals, differing definitions of nuclear capability, and the potential for clandestine programs, making it essential to consider all contributing elements to fully understand the complexity of nuclear proliferation.

True / False

6. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: China is classified as a state actor with significant geopolitical influence and is involved in complex diplomatic and economic relationships, distinguishing it from nonstate actors like terrorists and drug traffickers that operate outside the framework of formal state authority.

7. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: American exceptionalism, characterized by the belief in the United States as a unique force for democracy and free enterprise, inherently supports the liberalization of global trade as it aligns with the nation's foundational commitment to free market principles and the promotion of economic interdependence among nations.

8. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The statement is false because during the presidencies of George H.W. Bush and Bill Clinton, the executive branch maintained significant control over foreign policy decisions, often circumventing Congress through executive agreements and military actions without formal declarations of war.

9. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Ideational approaches to US foreign policy during the Cold War prioritize the role of ideological frameworks, such as anti-communism and democracy promotion, in shaping decisions and actions, often overshadowing considerations of material interests and power dynamics.

10. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Regime type is not a reliable predictor of nuclear weapons pursuit because both democratic and authoritarian states have successfully developed nuclear arsenals, influenced more by security concerns, regional dynamics, and historical context than by their governmental structure.

Long Form Response

11. Answer: The institutional innovation of security studies emerged largely due to broader political considerations regarding the implications of long-term mobilization. As states recognized the limitations of tactical operations in an increasingly complex global landscape, there was a pressing need to develop comprehensive strategies that could address not only immediate threats but also long-term security challenges. This shift was influenced by factors such as the rise of transnational threats, the interconnectedness of global politics, and the importance of stability in international relations.

Consequently, security studies evolved to emphasize strategic long-term planning, enabling policymakers to anticipate and mitigate risks while fostering resilience in the face of evolving geopolitical dynamics. This transition reflects a profound understanding that sustainable security requires a holistic approach that transcends short-term tactical responses.

Note: correct because it identifies how broader political considerations, particularly the need for comprehensive strategies in response to transnational threats and complex global dynamics, drove the institutional innovation of security studies focused on long-term mobilization.

12. Answer: The concept of the 'subaltern' in postcolonialism refers to groups and individuals who exist outside the dominant power structures, often facing systemic marginalization and exclusion. This notion, rooted in the work of theorists such as Gayatri Chakravorty Spivak, highlights how hegemonic narratives can silence the voices and experiences of these populations. Understanding the subaltern is crucial for analyzing how power operates in society, as it reveals the complexities of identity, representation, and resistance within oppressive systems. By foregrounding the experiences of the subaltern, scholars can challenge dominant discourses and advocate for more inclusive frameworks that acknowledge the agency and struggles of marginalized communities. This critical perspective not only enriches the discourse in political science but also calls into question the legitimacy and universality of hegemonic narratives.

Note: This answer is correct because it accurately defines the subaltern as marginalized groups outside dominant power structures, emphasizes the importance of their silenced voices in hegemonic narratives, and connects this understanding to the broader implications of power dynamics and identity in postcolonial contexts.
