

Multiple Choice

1. Answer: C

Options: A) bread and butter.; B) war and peace.; C) guns and butter.; D) bombs and books.

Note: The phrase "guns and butter" encapsulates the economic and political trade-off between a nation's investment in military defense ("guns") versus its spending on social welfare programs and public goods ("butter"), highlighting the opportunity costs associated with resource allocation in governance.

2. Answer: A

Options: A) Realism; B) Idealism; C) Liberalism; D) None of the above

Note: Realism prioritizes national interest and power over moral considerations, arguing that the use of force abroad for humanitarian purposes undermines state sovereignty and can lead to adverse consequences.

3. Answer: C

Options: A) national security adviser.; B) director of the CIA.; C) secretary of defense.; D) secretary of state.

Note: The secretary of defense is the primary civilian official responsible for overseeing the Department of Defense and advising the president on military matters, making them the principal civilian adviser on military issues.

4. Answer: C

Options: A) A virus or worm; B) A Trojan horse; C) A hacker tool; D) A corrupted program

Note: Malware, short for malicious software, is designed to infiltrate, damage, or disable computers and networks, often used as a tool by hackers to exploit vulnerabilities for political or economic gain.

5. Answer: A

Options: A) A new democratic internationalism led by the United States; B) A new balance of power between the US and China; C) A new global economic framework; D) A new era of globalization

Note: The term 'New World Order' refers to the post-Cold War geopolitical landscape characterized by the promotion of democracy and international cooperation, primarily spearheaded by the United States as it sought to establish a unipolar world order based on liberal democratic values.

True / False

6. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Rosenau contends that both internal factors, such as domestic politics and public opinion, and external factors influence the foreign policy behavior of the United States, making the statement false.

7. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Lincoln opposed the southward expansion of the US because he believed that allowing slavery to extend into new territories would undermine his efforts to limit and contain the institution of slavery, which he viewed as morally wrong and politically detrimental to the nation's future.

8. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Richard Nixon's 1972 visit to communist China was pivotal as it initiated formal diplomatic relations between the U.S. and China, breaking decades of isolation and signaling a major shift in global geopolitical dynamics.

9. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The 2008 financial crisis undermined confidence in the US dollar as a stable currency due to the perception of systemic risk in the US financial system and concerns over government debt levels, leading many investors to seek alternative currencies and assets.

10. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: In a multipolar system, power is distributed among multiple states, leading to several influential countries that interact and compete with one another, rather than a single dominant power.

Long Form Response

11. Answer: The Marxist perspective on U.S. foreign policy posits that economic interests, particularly the search for new markets, drive the nation's international actions. This approach argues that the capitalist system necessitates the expansion of markets to sustain economic growth and profitability, leading the U.S. to engage in interventions and alliances that favor its corporate interests. Such policies often manifest in support for regimes or movements that align with U.S. economic objectives, thereby perpetuating a cycle of exploitation and dominance in global relations. The implications of this perspective suggest that U.S. foreign policy is less about promoting democracy or human rights and more about securing economic footholds, which can exacerbate global inequalities and foster resentment against American hegemony. Ultimately, this analysis challenges the notion of altruism in U.S. foreign policy, framing it instead as a mechanism for sustaining capitalist interests on a global scale.

Note: The answer correctly identifies the central tenet of the Marxist perspective that U.S. foreign policy is primarily motivated by economic interests and the need for market expansion, which drives interventions and alliances that align with capitalist goals.

12. Answer: Culture plays a pivotal role in social constructivism by shaping the meanings and interpretations that states assign to security and identity. As a collection of practices and shared experiences, culture influences how states perceive threats and opportunities, often dictating the values and norms that underpin their security policies. For example, cultural narratives can lead a state to prioritize certain security issues over others, reflecting historical experiences and collective memory. Furthermore, these cultural practices are integral to identity formation, as they inform the collective self- understanding of a state, influencing its interactions with both domestic and international actors. Thus, the interplay between culture and social constructivism highlights how deeply ingrained societal values and practices shape state behavior and perceptions of security.

Note: correct because it illustrates how culture, as a framework of shared meanings and practices, directly impacts state perceptions of security and identity formation by influencing the prioritization of security issues based on historical experiences and collective memory.
