

Multiple Choice

1. Answer: C

Options: A) It feared the League would encourage Soviet influence in the US; B) It feared the League would be anti-democratic; C) It feared the League would commit the US to an international alliance; D) Both a and b

Note: Congress opposed Wilson's proposal for the League of Nations because it feared that membership would entangle the United States in international alliances and conflicts, undermining national sovereignty and the ability to make independent foreign policy decisions.

2. Answer: D

Options: A) Naval victories; B) Diplomacy; C) British preoccupation with Europe; D) All of the above

Note: The correct answer "All of the above" is supported by the fact that a combination of strategic military decisions, the resilience of American forces, and the geographical advantages of the United States collectively contributed to preventing a total disaster during the British invasion in 1814.

3. Answer: A

Options: A) an iron triangle; B) a conference committee; C) a regulatory agency; D) dual federalism

Note: The Small Business Administration, the Small Business committees in the House and Senate, and small business advocacy groups form an iron triangle because they create a stable and mutually beneficial relationship that influences policy and legislation related to small businesses through their interconnected interests and support.

4. Answer: B

Options: A) They allow the US to withdraw from the international arena; B) They serve American interests; C) The US is incapable of acting alone; D) None of the above

Note: Liberal Internationalists argue that international institutions are important to US grand strategy because they facilitate cooperation among states, promote stability, and help advance American interests through the establishment of norms and rules that align with US values and objectives.

5. Answer: C

Options: A) Below 20 million; B) 20-30 million; C) 30-40 million; D) 40-50 million

Note: The estimate of 30-40 million people living with HIV/AIDS worldwide is based on comprehensive data collected from various health organizations and research studies, reflecting the global prevalence of the virus and the ongoing impact of the epidemic.

True / False

6. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: American exceptionalism is a belief in the unique characteristics of the United States and does not inherently advocate for specific economic policies such as tariffs, which are typically associated with protectionist trade strategies rather than the core tenets of American exceptionalism.

7. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The preclearance provision of the Voting Rights Act primarily aimed to prevent discriminatory voting practices rather than directly influencing voter turnout, thus its absence is unlikely to be a significant factor in low voter participation in elections.

8. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Sanctions are implemented by countries or international bodies to restrict economic activity with targeted nations, thereby exerting pressure to encourage compliance with international norms, promoting peace by discouraging aggressive behaviors, and isolating regimes that pose threats to global security by limiting their access to resources and international support.

9. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The statement is false because there is a limited number of federal legislators who have backgrounds as professional athletes, indicating that this is not a common career path leading to political office.

10. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Frequent relocation of one's primary residence can disrupt young Americans' sense of community and stability, leading to lower voter engagement and participation rates.

Long Form Response

11. Answer: Institutional constraints significantly influence human behavior and decision-making in political contexts by establishing man-made rules that guide interactions among individuals and groups. These institutions, such as constitutions, laws, and regulations, create frameworks within which people operate, shaping their choices and actions. For example, electoral laws dictate how elections are conducted, influencing political participation and party dynamics. Similarly, bureaucratic procedures can constrain the decision-making capabilities of public officials, impacting policy implementation. By structuring these interactions, institutions not only facilitate order but also reflect the underlying power dynamics and values of a society, ultimately shaping political outcomes.

Note: correct because it effectively illustrates how institutional constraints, through established rules such as electoral laws and bureaucratic procedures, shape individual and collective behavior in political contexts by providing structured frameworks for decision-making and interactions.

12. Answer: Global inequality, exacerbated by neoliberal globalization, poses a significant threat to global security as it creates conditions ripe for revolutionary uprisings among marginalized populations. Those who have been economically disenfranchised often feel a deep sense of injustice and alienation, which can lead to radicalization and a desire to revolt against the structures that perpetuate their oppression. As wealth becomes increasingly concentrated among a small elite, the disenfranchised may see no other recourse but to challenge the status quo violently. This potential for upheaval not only destabilizes regions but can also have broader implications for international peace and security, as revolutionary movements may lead to conflicts that spill over borders. Therefore, addressing global inequality is crucial not only for moral and economic reasons but also to mitigate the risks of social unrest and violence that threaten global stability.

Note: correct because it articulates how neoliberal globalization intensifies economic disparities, fostering feelings of injustice and alienation among marginalized groups, which can ultimately lead to revolutionary uprisings that threaten global security.
