

Multiple Choice

1. Answer: B

Options: A) Every case appealed to the Supreme Court is ruled upon by the court.; B) The court helps set the public agenda by deciding which appeals to hear.; C) The court hears all cases when two or more justices agree that the case has merit.; D) In deciding cases, the chief justice's vote counts as two votes.

Note: The Supreme Court influences the public agenda by selecting cases that address significant legal and societal issues, thereby shaping national discourse and prioritizing which matters are deemed important for judicial review.

2. Answer: B

Options: A) US expansion was based on territory rather than markets post-1865; B) US expansion was based on markets rather than territory post-1865; C) US expansion was limited to Latin America post-1865; D) US expansion ended after 1865

Note: The correct answer highlights that after 1865, the United States shifted its focus from acquiring physical territory to expanding markets and economic influence, reflecting a transformation in national priorities driven by industrialization and globalization.

3. Answer: B

Options: A) The character of a state's leader; B) The distribution of power in the international system; C) The distribution of power within a state's governmental system; D) A state's political ideology

Note: According to systemic theories, the distribution of power in the international system fundamentally shapes a state's foreign policy by influencing its strategic interests, capabilities, and behavior in relation to other states.

4. Answer: A

Options: A) A new democratic internationalism led by the United States; B) A new balance of power between the US and China; C) A new global economic framework; D) A new era of globalization

Note: The term 'New World Order' refers to the post-Cold War vision of global politics characterized by increased cooperation and democratic ideals, predominantly championed by the United States as it sought to promote democracy and liberal values internationally.

5. Answer: D

Options: A) due process; B) assembly; C) free exercise of religion; D) free speech

Note: The correct answer is "free speech" because the Supreme Court has ruled that flag burning constitutes a form of symbolic speech protected under the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

True / False

6. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The statement is false because the regulation of interstate commerce is an implied power derived from the Commerce Clause in Article I, Section 8 of the Constitution, which grants Congress the authority to regulate commerce among the states but does not explicitly enumerate the regulation of interstate commerce as a power.

7. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The statement is true because the United States Constitution grants Congress the power to override a presidential veto if both the House of Representatives and the Senate pass the bill again with a two-thirds majority vote in each chamber.

8. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The statement is true because the Supreme Court has utilized the doctrine of incorporation, primarily through the Fourteenth Amendment's due process clause, to extend certain protections of the Bill of Rights to apply to state laws, thereby ensuring that individual rights are upheld at both federal and state levels.

9. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: This statement is true because the Supreme Court receives thousands of petitions for writs of certiorari each year, but it typically grants only a small fraction, generally around 1% to 2%, reflecting its selective process in choosing cases that have significant legal implications.

10. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The State Department is responsible for managing diplomatic relations and implementing the president's foreign policy initiatives through its network of ambassadors and diplomatic staff worldwide, making its role essential in both the formulation and execution of U.S. foreign policy.

Long Form Response

11. Answer: Since the end of the Cold War, state practice and policy have increasingly indicated a customary right to humanitarian intervention in emergency situations, though this right does not extend to a duty to intervene. Instances such as NATO's intervention in Kosovo in 1999 and the U.S.-led intervention in Libya in 2011 demonstrate how states have justified military action on humanitarian grounds, responding to egregious human rights violations. These actions have established a precedent where the international community recognizes the legitimacy of intervening to prevent mass atrocities, despite the lack of a legal obligation to do so. However, the variability in state responses and the selective nature of interventions suggest that while there is support for the right to intervene, consensus on a binding duty remains elusive. This underscores the complexity of state practice in international relations concerning humanitarian crises.

Note: correct because it illustrates how post-Cold War state actions, notably NATO's and the U.S.'s interventions, have created a precedent for a customary right to humanitarian intervention based on the justification of protecting human rights, while clarifying that such a right does not imply an obligation to intervene in every emergency situation.

12. Answer: Game theory and deterrence theory significantly advanced the intellectual landscape of the 'golden age' of security studies by providing robust conceptual frameworks that shaped strategic thinking. Game theory introduced analytical tools that allowed scholars to model international interactions as strategic games, emphasizing concepts such as 'secure second strike capability' and 'escalation dominance.' Deterrence theory built upon these ideas, focusing on how states could prevent aggression through the credible threat of retaliation, which led to the notion of 'extended deterrence.' Together, these theories created a reality where the calculations of power dynamics and security were abstracted into formalized strategies, informing both policy-making and academic discourse on international relations. This integration of theoretical approaches not only enhanced understanding of state behavior but also had practical implications for military strategy and international security.

Note: correct because it articulates how game theory's strategic modeling and deterrence theory's focus on preventing aggression collectively enhanced the understanding of state interactions and security dynamics during the 'golden age' of security studies.
