

Multiple Choice

1. Answer: B

Options: A) testing out new research methods to see which one works best; B) isolating and measuring the effect of one variable upon another; C) using personal beliefs and values to decide what to study; D) interpreting data subjectively, drawing on theoretical paradigms

Note: The correct answer emphasizes that the experimental method in science is fundamentally about controlling and manipulating one variable to observe its direct impact on another, thereby ensuring that causal relationships can be accurately identified and analyzed.

2. Answer: A

Options: A) those in non-manual occupations, exercising authority on behalf of the state; B) people working in consultancy firms who were recruited by big businesses; C) the young men and women employed in domestic service in the nineteenth century; D) those who had worked in the armed services

Note: The correct answer is supported by Goldthorpe's sociological framework, which categorizes the 'service class' as individuals engaged in non-manual jobs that involve exercising authority and decision-making within state institutions, reflecting their role in the labor market and social structure.

3. Answer: C

Options: A) ethnic communities, based on shared identity and experiences of discrimination; B) gay villages, which are formed in certain parts of large cities; C) sociological communities, formed by unpopular lecturers; D) virtual communities that exist only in cyberspace

Note: Sociological communities, particularly those formed by unpopular lecturers, are not recognized as new forms of community because they are based on existing academic structures rather than emerging social dynamics or innovative community formations.

4. Answer: D

Options: A) its theories are logical, explicit and supported by empirical evidence; B) sociologists collect data in a relatively objective and systematic way; C) ideas and research findings are scrutinized by other sociologists; D) all of the above

Note: Sociology is considered a social science because it systematically studies human behavior, social institutions, and societal structures, incorporating various research methods and theoretical frameworks to understand complex social phenomena.

5. Answer: D

Options: A) more funding for students in higher education; B) the delegation of power and budgetary control to LEAs; C) a reduction in parental choice of school; D) increased state regulation through national testing and inspections

Note: The introduction of market principles in the 1980 s led to increased state regulation through national testing and inspections as governments sought to ensure accountability and standardization in education amidst the shift towards competition and choice in the schooling system.

True / False

6. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Dahrendorf, Rex, and Habermas each emphasized the role of power relations and social conflicts in shaping societal structures, illustrating how domination influences social dynamics and individual agency.

7. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Weber believed that while empirical validity is important, sociological theories must also consider the values and interpretive meanings that shape social phenomena, making the evaluation of these theories inherently influenced by subjective values.

8. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Cultural restructuring involves revitalizing economically declined urban areas through the creation of new economic opportunities and cultural attractions, which can include transforming industrial spaces into tourist-friendly environments and leveraging media advertising to promote these changes.

9. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Lombroso's theory of criminology posited that certain physical and biological characteristics, which he referred to as "atavistic traits," predisposed individuals to criminal behavior, thus supporting the idea that biological failings were a primary factor in criminality.

10. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Research indicates that women's motivations for pursuing cosmetic surgery are multifaceted and often stem from personal desires for self-improvement, societal beauty ideals, and peer influences rather than solely from pressure exerted by male partners.

Long Form Response

11. Answer: Marx's assertion that religion would diminish following a socialist revolution is rooted in the belief that such a revolution would eradicate the capitalist ideology that underpins religious belief systems. In a capitalist society, religion often serves to justify social hierarchies and economic inequalities, providing a sense of hope or justification for the oppressed. By dismantling the structures of capitalism, a socialist revolution would remove the socio-economic conditions that enable religion to thrive as a tool of alienation and oppression. Consequently, as the material conditions of life improve and equality is established, the need for religious consolation diminishes, leading to a decline in religious belief and practice. This transformation reflects Marx's view that ideology, including religion, is shaped by the material realities of society, and thus, a fundamental change in those realities would precipitate a corresponding shift in ideological frameworks.

Note: correct because it articulates Marx's view that the socio-economic conditions of capitalism perpetuate religious beliefs that justify inequality, and that a socialist revolution would eliminate these conditions, leading to a decline in religious influence.

12. Answer: Totalitarian societies are characterized by an absolute concentration of power in a central authority, which seeks to control not only the political and economic spheres but also the social and cultural dimensions of life. A defining feature of such regimes is the significant restriction of citizen freedoms, particularly the freedom of movement. In totalitarian systems, the state often imposes severe limitations on where individuals can travel, both domestically and internationally, as a means to monitor, control, and restrict dissent. This suppression of mobility reinforces the regime's dominance by preventing the spread of alternative ideas and fostering a climate of fear and conformity. Ultimately, the curtailment of movement exemplifies the broader nature of totalitarianism, where individual autonomy is systematically dismantled in favor of collective obedience to the state.

Note: correct because it identifies the concentration of power and the systematic restriction of individual freedoms, particularly freedom of movement, as fundamental characteristics that define the oppressive nature of totalitarian societies.