

Multiple Choice

1. Answer: D

Options: A) distinct periods of non-work and relaxation; B) regulated and organized activities to reduce social disorder; C) the growth of civic, municipal culture through public libraries, museums and art galleries; D) all of the above

Note: The correct answer is "all of the above" because industrial capitalism transformed the nature of work and production, leading to increased productivity and wealth, which in turn allowed for the emergence of leisure as a distinct social concept encompassing various forms of recreation, cultural engagement, and personal development.

2. Answer: B

Options: A) globalization; B) stability and the structure of society; C) secularism and mechanization; D) industrialization

Note: Equilibrium theories of social change focus on the idea that societies tend to maintain stability through established structures and institutions, emphasizing the importance of balance between social elements rather than rapid change.

3. Answer: A

Options: A) women's susceptibility to stress depended on their levels of social support; B) self-reported depression is highest amongst men and the relatively affluent; C) men and women have fairly similar levels of diagnosed depression; D) men are more vulnerable to depression because of conventional gender roles

Note: Brown & Harris (1978) demonstrated that women with lower levels of social support were more vulnerable to stressors, highlighting the critical role of social networks in influencing mental health outcomes such as depression.

4. Answer: D

Options: A) A preschool provider; B) A peer group; C) The mass media; D) The family

Note: The family is the most important agent of socialization in early childhood because it is the primary source of emotional support, values, and norms that shape a child's understanding of the world and their place within it.

5. Answer: D

Options: A) audiences selectively interpret what they want to hear; B) content analysis is the best way to identify the themes covered by the media; C) audiences passively absorb whatever messages they are given; D) social interaction reinforces the ideas and images that audiences select

Note: The media-themes model of media influence posits that social interactions serve to validate and strengthen the ideas and images that individuals choose to engage with, thereby reinforcing their existing beliefs and perceptions shaped by media exposure.

True / False

6. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The statement is false because law and order were not solely privatized during that period; rather, new technologies for public policing were integrated alongside traditional public policing methods, reflecting a complex interplay between public and private sectors in law enforcement.

7. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Scientific management primarily emphasizes the optimization of work processes and the control of employee tasks by management rather than promoting employee autonomy and self-regulation.

8. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: In contemporary societies, social institutions such as family, education, economy, and government are indeed highly specialized and interdependent, as they collectively shape and regulate individual behavior and societal norms, thus structuring social life.

9. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The statement is true because the economic downturn of the 1980 s led to higher unemployment rates, which in turn increased reliance on welfare programs, disproportionately affecting low-income individuals and widening the gap between the wealthy and the poor.

10. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Becker argued that cannabis use was not uniformly widespread among all youth in the 1970 s, as it varied significantly by social context, subcultures, and geographic location, contradicting the notion of a uniform trend.

Long Form Response

11. Answer: Blauner's (1964) analysis of alienation in the workplace, particularly in car manufacturing assembly plants, highlights how the mechanization of labor leads to a disconnection between workers and the products of their labor. Factors contributing to this alienation include the repetitive nature of tasks, strict supervision, and a lack of autonomy, which strip workers of their creativity and sense of ownership over their work. This environment fosters feelings of powerlessness and depersonalization, as workers become cogs in a vast industrial machine. The impact of such alienation can be profound, leading to decreased job satisfaction, lower morale, and even mental health issues among employees. Ultimately, Blauner's work illuminates how the structure of industrial labor not only affects productivity but also the well-being of the workforce.

Note: correct because it accurately identifies the key factors of task repetition, strict supervision, and lack of autonomy that Blauner argues contribute to workers' alienation in assembly plants, leading to feelings of powerlessness and a disconnection from their labor.

12. Answer: The New Right perspective on family values emphasizes traditional nuclear family structures, advocating for marriage as the ideal context for raising children and fostering social stability. This ideology often critiques contemporary social changes, including the rise of cohabitation before marriage, viewing it as a threat to these values. Cohabitation challenges the New Right's arguments by promoting alternative family arrangements that may prioritize personal choice and economic pragmatism over traditional commitments, suggesting that stable family dynamics can exist outside of marriage. However, proponents of the New Right argue that cohabitation often lacks the legal and social commitments that marriage entails, potentially leading to less stable family environments. Thus, while cohabitation may reflect a shift in societal norms, it simultaneously raises questions about the sustainability of family values as defined by the New Right.

Note: correct because it accurately identifies the New Right's advocacy for traditional nuclear families and marriage, while also analyzing how cohabitation before marriage contradicts their values by emphasizing individual choice and economic considerations over established family norms.
