

Multiple Choice

1. Answer: A

Options: A) schools prepare children for work by teaching them to be obedient; B) teachers and parents tend to have similar attitudes to learning; C) children who write lots of letters develop a better grasp of language; D) boys' and girls' educational achievements have recently become similar

Note: The correspondence principle posits that the hierarchical structure and discipline within schools mirror the dynamics of the workplace, thereby socializing students into obedience and conformity essential for their future roles in a capitalist economy.

2. Answer: C

Options: A) marketization and privatization; B) individual freedom, choice and responsibility; C) generous financial benefits for single parents, students and the unemployed; D) the rolling back of the welfare state

Note: Thatcher's government, characterized by its neoliberal policies, aimed to reduce state welfare spending and promote individual responsibility, which led to cuts in financial benefits for single parents, students, and the unemployed rather than striving to provide generous support for these groups.

3. Answer: C

Options: A) absolute poverty; B) relative poverty; C) vertical mobility; D) horizontal mobility

Note: Vertical mobility refers to the movement of individuals or groups within a social hierarchy, specifically when someone changes their social position to a higher or lower status than they were born into, which aligns with the question's description.

4. Answer: D

Options: A) it is committed on a larger, often global, scale, and is well organized; B) it is associated with political conflict between states and their citizens; C) it can have far-reaching effects upon international relations; D) all of the above

Note: The correct answer "all of the above" is supported by the key concept that terrorism is characterized by its political motives, intended to create fear and influence societal change, which fundamentally distinguishes it from the individualistic and socio-economic crime types emphasized by the Chicago School.

5. Answer: C

Options: A) finding out which topics are important to the respondents; B) testing out your computer and printer; C) identifying any problems with the question wording and routing; D) deciding which respondents to leave out of the final sample

Note: Pre-testing a questionnaire allows researchers to identify ambiguities or biases in question wording and assess the effectiveness of routing instructions, ensuring that the final instrument accurately captures the intended data.

True / False

6. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The statement is false because former slaves did not receive financial compensation for their labor, as the institution of slavery ended without any reparations or provisions for the economic support of freed individuals.

7. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The feminist standpoint asserts that women's experiences and perspectives are essential for understanding societal structures and power dynamics, thereby revealing insights that are often overlooked in traditional sociological analyses.

8. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Weber argued that Calvinists' emphasis on asceticism and hard work as a means of demonstrating their faith and election by God contributed to the development of the capitalist spirit, as it encouraged rational economic behavior and the accumulation of wealth.

9. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: During the nineteenth century, homosexuality was largely stigmatized and pathologized, leading to widespread discrimination and a lack of acceptance rather than celebration as a positive identity.

10. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Bourdieu's concept of cultural capital highlights how the knowledge, skills, education, and cultural assets inherited from one generation to another influence individuals' social positions, thereby contributing to the persistence of social class structures over time.

Long Form Response

11. Answer: Modernization theory in sociology posits that societies progress through a series of stages from traditional to modern industrial forms of organization, driven by technological advancement, economic development, and social change. It suggests that traditional societies, characterized by subsistence agriculture and communal living, evolve into modern societies marked by industrialization, urbanization, and individualism. This transition is facilitated by the adoption of new technologies and the shift from agrarian economies to industrial and service-oriented economies. Proponents argue that such changes lead to improved living standards, greater education, and enhanced political participation. However, critics of modernization theory highlight its Eurocentric bias and neglect of the complexities and variations in development across different cultures.

Note: correct because it accurately describes modernization theory as a framework that outlines the progression of societies from traditional to modern industrial structures, emphasizing the roles of technological advancements, economic growth, and shifts in social organization.

12. Answer: Marx's assertion that religion would cease to exist following a socialist revolution is rooted in his belief that capitalist ideology creates a framework in which religious belief flourishes as a means of coping with social and economic inequalities. In a capitalist society, religion often serves to justify the status quo and provide solace to the oppressed, effectively masking the harsh realities of exploitation. However, with the implementation of a socialist revolution, the fundamental structures that perpetuate capitalist ideology-such as class divisions and material deprivation-would be dismantled. As these conditions are alleviated, the societal need for religion as an opiate to soothe suffering would diminish, leading to its eventual decline. Thus, Marx posits that the transformation of economic relations would inherently reduce reliance on religious beliefs, resulting in a more secular society aligned with socialist principles.
Note: correct because it articulates Marx's view that religion is a product of capitalist ideology that serves to rationalize inequality, and that a socialist revolution would eliminate the conditions that give rise to religious belief by addressing the underlying social injustices.
