

Multiple Choice

1. Answer: C

Options: A) shared working conditions in the manufacturing industry; B) the class consciousness of members of the proletariat; C) local communities, extended kinship networks and shared leisure pursuits; D) collective aspirations to move into the middle class

Note: The correct answer reflects the sociological understanding that traditional working-class identity is deeply rooted in the social structures of local communities, which foster strong extended kinship networks and collective leisure activities, creating a sense of belonging and shared identity among members.

2. Answer: D

Options: A) the white population did not believe in liberty, equality, and democracy; B) they wanted to retain a strong sense of their original ethnic identity; C) they were not prepared to leave the Southern states and move to North America; D) the promise of citizenship was contradicted by continued discrimination

Note: The correct answer highlights that despite the formal promise of citizenship, systemic racism and ongoing discrimination prevented black former slaves from fully integrating into society, thus undermining their participation in the so-called 'ethnic melting pot' of North American cities.

3. Answer: B

Options: A) scrutinizing employees as they interacted with customers; B) teamwork, communication and employee satisfaction; C) strict control and discipline to ensure high productivity; D) providing therapy and counselling in the workplace

Note: The human relations approach emphasizes the significance of teamwork, communication, and employee satisfaction as essential components for fostering positive workplace dynamics and enhancing organizational productivity.

4. Answer: A

Options: A) both boys and girls being closely attached to their mothers, but then boys breaking away; B) girls being attached to their mothers but then breaking away; C) boys being attached to their fathers and girls to their mothers; D) both boys and girls being closely attached to their fathers, but girls breaking away

Note: Chodorow (1978) emphasized that while both boys and girls initially develop close attachments to their mothers during early childhood, boys subsequently distance themselves from this maternal bond to form their masculine identity, which is a key aspect of gender socialization.

5. Answer: C

Options: A) the increasing power of trade unions in resolving industrial disputes; B) a resurgence of interest in industrial production and manufacturing; C) a shift towards a service economy, based on knowledge and information; D) all of the above

Note: The correct answer reflects Bell's assertion that post-industrial society is characterized by a transition from manufacturing-based economies to those dominated by services and information, emphasizing the growing importance of knowledge in economic development.

True / False

6. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The statement is false because an extended family includes relatives beyond the immediate family, such as grandparents, aunts, uncles, and cousins, whereas Robert and Tanya's family, consisting only of themselves and their three children, is classified as a nuclear family.

7. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Frank argued that 'underdeveloped' societies are often compelled to change due to external pressures and exploitation rather than a reluctance to abandon their traditional ways of life.

8. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The social construction of childhood is true because the emergence of compulsory education, the emphasis on emotional bonds between adults and children, and the marketing of consumer goods specifically for children have all contributed to defining and shaping the experiences and identities associated with childhood in modern society.

9. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The 'new man' of the 1980 s was characterized more by an embrace of sensitivity, emotional openness, and a rejection of traditional masculine stereotypes rather than being primarily seen as laddish, aggressive, and violent.

10. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Murray's thesis in "Losing Ground" posits that the 'underclass' is characterized by moral failings, dependence on welfare, and perceived lower intelligence, reflecting his belief that these traits contribute to social problems.

Long Form Response

11. Answer: The concept of the social construction of reality, as articulated by Peter Berger and Thomas Luckmann, posits that individuals actively engage in the negotiation of shared definitions regarding their social situations. This process involves individuals interpreting and redefining their experiences within a social context, leading to a collective understanding that shapes societal perceptions. Importantly, people often internalize these constructed realities, forgetting that they are not immutable truths but rather fluid interpretations influenced by ongoing social interactions. This understanding highlights the dynamic nature of social life, as individuals continually reproduce and modify their social worlds through communication and collaboration, ultimately affecting the broader societal norms and values.

Note: correct because it effectively captures Berger and Luckmann's idea that reality is shaped through social interactions and shared meanings, emphasizing the role of individual agency in constructing societal perceptions and the tendency to internalize these socially negotiated definitions.

12. Answer: The family serves as the primary agent of socialization in early childhood, profoundly influencing individual development and shaping societal values. From the moment a child is born, family members impart essential norms, beliefs, and behaviors that form the foundation of the child's identity and worldview. This early socialization process helps children learn language, develop emotional bonds, and acquire basic social skills, all of which are crucial for their integration into society. Furthermore, families transmit cultural values and expectations, which guide children's understanding of their roles within the larger community. As a result, the family's influence not only contributes to personal development but also reinforces the continuity of societal norms and values across generations.

Note: correct because it emphasizes the family's crucial role in early childhood socialization by highlighting how it teaches children essential norms, beliefs, and social skills that are fundamental for their individual development and integration into society.