

Multiple Choice

1. Answer: C

Options: A) criminals were socialized into an 'underworld' of crime; B) no act is intrinsically deviant; C) biological failings drove some people into crime; D) women were less likely to be arrested than men

Note: Lombroso's theory of criminology posits that biological determinism, specifically physical and hereditary traits, predisposes certain individuals to criminal behavior, thereby asserting that biological failings are a primary driving force behind crime.

2. Answer: B

Options: A) contrasted homosexuality with heterosexuality; B) distinguished between male and females as separate sexes; C) represented women's genitalia as underdeveloped versions of men's; D) argued for male superiority over women

Note: Laqueur's 'two-sex' model asserts that male and female are distinct biological categories, emphasizing the social and cultural constructions surrounding these differences rather than viewing gender as a spectrum or a single biological category.

3. Answer: D

Options: A) a means of transporting money between different areas of a country; B) an empire with a bureaucratic administration but no political centre; C) an awareness of risks and dangers that affect the environment as a whole; D) a unit with a division of labour that extends across ethnic and cultural groups

Note: The correct answer identifies the capitalist world economy as a 'world system' because it encompasses a complex division of labor that transcends ethnic and cultural boundaries, illustrating how global economic interactions and interdependencies shape societal structures.

4. Answer: C

Options: A) the state's power can be exercised through several different administrative structures; B) the ruling elite is composed of people from various class backgrounds; C) political parties must compete for the votes of 'consumers' in the electorate; D) there is a close alignment between class background and party preference

Note: Pluralist theories emphasize that political parties operate in a competitive environment where they must appeal to the preferences and interests of voters, likening the electorate to consumers who make choices based on the offerings of various parties.

5. Answer: D

Options: A) domesticating its content, including more 'home-produced' programmes; B) controlling the distribution of imported products by banning satellite dishes; C) creating 'reverse flows' of their own programmes back to imperial societies; D) all of the above

Note: Sreberny-Mohammadi (1996) highlights that national cultures can resist American cultural domination through various means, including local media production, cultural adaptation, and the promotion of indigenous narratives, thereby affirming that all the listed strategies collectively contribute to this resistance.

True / False

6. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: 'Snowballing' is a non-probability sampling technique where existing study subjects recruit future subjects from their acquaintances, leading to a biased sample rather than a random selection from the larger population.

7. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: This statement is false because Parsons viewed the modern family as a stabilizing institution that plays a key role in socialization and the emotional support of its members, rather than primarily as a mechanism of oppression or labor reproduction.

8. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Marx believed that the labor movement would not only unite the working class as a class in itself but also develop its political consciousness, ultimately leading to revolutionary change and the overthrow of capitalist society.

9. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The statement is false because the term 'sociology' was first coined by Auguste Comte in the early 19th century, not Karl Marx, who focused on class struggle and economic theories rather than defining the principles of sociology as a discipline.

10. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Mass-society theory posits that audiences are passive recipients of media messages, suggesting that they are more influenced by the media than they actively interpret it based on personal beliefs and experiences.

Long Form Response

11. Answer: The concept of 'research purpose' in sociology refers to the specific aim or objective that drives a sociological investigation, guiding the formulation of research questions, selection of methodologies, and interpretation of findings. Research purposes can range from exploratory to explanatory, each serving distinct functions in understanding social phenomena. Triangulation, which involves using multiple methods or data sources to validate findings, does not align with this definition because it is primarily a methodological strategy rather than a purpose in itself. While triangulation can enhance the robustness of research, it does not inherently define the aim of the research; instead, it serves to strengthen the conclusions drawn from a given research purpose. Thus, while both concepts are vital in sociological research, their roles and definitions are fundamentally different.

Note: correct because it accurately defines 'research purpose' as the guiding aim of a sociological study, while contrasting it with triangulation, which is a methodological approach rather than a research aim.

12. Answer: Totalitarian societies are characterized by centralized control, a single-party rule, pervasive propaganda, and the suppression of dissent. In such regimes, the lack of freedom of movement significantly impacts citizens' lives by restricting their ability to travel, access information, and connect with others outside their immediate environment. This confinement fosters a climate of fear and obedience, as individuals are unable to seek alternative perspectives or challenge the status quo. Additionally, the societal structure becomes rigid, with a populace that is often disengaged and reliant on the state for information and direction, thereby perpetuating the regime's power and control. Ultimately, the absence of mobility not only stifles personal freedom but also undermines social cohesion and the potential for collective resistance.

Note: correct because it accurately identifies the defining features of totalitarian societies and explains how restricted movement contributes to a culture of fear and obedience, ultimately limiting citizens' access to diverse perspectives and reinforcing the regime's control.
