

Multiple Choice

1. Answer: A

Options: A) transnational corporations; B) multi-media empires; C) ownership concentrated within one medium; D) government-owned companies

Note: Walt Disney, Sony, and Time Warner are considered transnational corporations because they operate in multiple countries, engaging in business activities that transcend national boundaries while influencing global culture and economy.

2. Answer: C

Options: A) Labour Force Survey; B) General Household Survey; C) Fashion Sensibility Survey; D) Family Expenditure Survey

Note: The Fashion Sensibility Survey is not a regular national survey carried out by the British government, as it focuses on subjective consumer preferences rather than essential demographic or social data typically collected in national surveys.

3. Answer: C

Options: A) A primary group; B) A secondary group; C) An aggregate; D) A social category

Note: The correct answer is "an aggregate" because an aggregate refers to a collection of individuals who are physically present in the same location but do not interact or share a common identity, as exemplified by the seven people waiting silently at the bus stop.

4. Answer: A

Options: A) self-governing trusts competing for purchasing contracts from health authorities; B) state-controlled providers, dependent on funding from the central government; C) increasingly detached from health authorities and providers of private health care; D) less inclined to run themselves efficiently, as demand for health care was falling

Note: The 1990 reform of the National Health Service introduced the concept of self-governing trusts to enhance efficiency and competition among hospitals, allowing them to operate independently and bid for purchasing contracts from health authorities, thereby transforming the landscape of healthcare delivery in the UK.

5. Answer: C

Options: A) the way in which products are made in a factory; B) the average measure of productivity under capitalism; C) the organization of a society's technical and human resources; D) an integral part of the superstructure of a society

Note: The correct answer reflects Marx's emphasis on how the mode of production, encompassing both the technical means of producing goods and the social relations between people involved in production, fundamentally shapes the economic structure and class dynamics of a society.

True / False

6. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The statement is true because the capitalist class in the mid-twentieth century accumulated upper-class status primarily through the ownership of companies and financial assets that produced significant wealth, reflecting the economic power and social prestige associated with capital ownership.

7. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The statement is true because the Industrial Revolution introduced mechanized production methods, leading to the establishment of factories that centralized labor and increased efficiency, fundamentally transforming work patterns and society.

8. Answer: False

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The household is typically considered a micro-level unit of analysis in sociology, while societal studies often focus on macro-level structures and institutions.

9. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: Surveys should avoid asking leading questions because such questions can influence respondents' thoughts and choices, ultimately compromising the objectivity and accuracy of the collected data.

10. Answer: True

Options: A) True; B) False

Note: The statement is true because the growing fear of HIV and AIDS became prominent in the 1980 s, well after the sexual revolution of the 1960 s, which had initially challenged traditional views on sexuality and sexual health.

Long Form Response

11. Answer: The New Right perspective on family values emphasizes a traditional view of the family as a nuclear unit, which they believe has been undermined by various social trends. They identify rising divorce rates, increasing single-parent households, and a decline in marriage rates as evidence of moral decay and the destabilization of societal norms. Interestingly, cohabitation before marriage, a significant trend in contemporary society, is often excluded from their critique. This omission can be attributed to the New Right's focus on promoting traditional marriage as the ideal family structure, suggesting that cohabitation, while common, does not align with their values of commitment and stability that marriage represents. Thus, their analysis tends to overlook cohabitation as a legitimate family arrangement, framing it instead as a precursor to the perceived decline in traditional family values.

Note: correct because it accurately outlines the New Right's emphasis on traditional family structures, identifies specific trends they associate with moral decline, and critically notes the selective omission of cohabitation from their critique, reflecting their ideological commitment to traditional marriage.

12. Answer: Totalitarian societies are characterized by a centralized authority that exercises complete control over all aspects of public and private life, including political, social, and economic dimensions. In such regimes, the government often employs propaganda, censorship, and surveillance to maintain its dominance and suppress dissent. Freedom of movement for citizens is fundamentally incompatible with totalitarianism because it allows individuals the autonomy to seek alternative viewpoints, escape oppression, and potentially organize resistance against the regime. By restricting movement, totalitarian governments aim to isolate individuals, inhibit the formation of opposition groups, and control the flow of information, thereby ensuring their grip on power remains unchallenged.

Note: correct because it identifies the essential characteristics of totalitarian societies, such as complete government control and suppression of dissent, and explains that freedom of movement undermines this control by enabling citizens to explore diverse perspectives and potentially challenge the regime.